INTRODUCTION

The book titles in this directory were compiled by Washington State Parent to Parent, a statewide network of support and information for families who are impacted by disability and chronic health issues. Some books were already available in various libraries throughout the state. New titles were purchased by the Washington State Department of Health, Office of Children with Special Health Care Needs, in collaboration with the Washington State Library. These titles may be requested through your public library, using the Interlibrary Loan process.

The books included in this directory are primarily intended to be a resource for families of children with special health care needs. However, any individual in the field of disabilities, special education or specialized health care will find titles that are sure to be of interest and value to them.

Book recommendations were sought from a wide variety of sources in Washington State and throughout the nation. Contributors included individuals with special needs and their families, parent/family support organizations, specific disability groups, as well as health, education and social service providers/organizations. Recommended titles were screened and included based upon the following criteria:

- personal review and recommendation; or
- comprehensive written description available through a well-known/respected publisher; or
- coverage of a topic for which information for families/consumers was not available.

It is important to note that this is a selective collection of book titles only. Additional excellent resources exist in other formats, such as magazine articles and Internet information, and may be available at your public library. Check with your public librarian about other possible resources.

For agency information and referral services for families and caregivers in Washington State with children with special health care needs, call ASK (Answers for Special Kids) at 1-800-322-2588.

PURPOSE

The three ongoing purposes of this project are to:

- Provide access to information on a wide variety of issues and topics for families with children with special health care needs.
- Use the public library network as an existing, community-based resource system.
- Broaden the awareness among families about additional resources potentially available in a variety of formats at the public library, including the electronic medium.

HOW TO USE THIS DIRECTORY

The books in this directory are listed alphabetically under topical special need categories. There are several books written in Spanish; and they will be found within the alphabetical listings. Please see the Table of Contents for a complete listing of the categories. The author, title, copyright date, and publisher are listed for each book, where possible. A book may appear more than once in the directory if it fits under more than one topic or category. In addition, books written specifically for children are listed beginning with "JUVENILE".

Information and instructions on accessing and using the Interlibrary Loan process and other library resources are described on the following pages.

A special note of encouragement: if you are not experienced in library researches, do not hesitate to ask the librarian for instruction and assistance; that is his/her job!

THE INTERLIBRARY LOAN PROCESS

Interlibrary Loan is a process whereby any person with a current library card may request a book or magazine article from another library. Every book included in this listing is available at some library in Washington State. If a book listed in this directory is not available at your local library, it is important to request an Interlibrary Loan for this book from the librarian.

The directory provides the essential information for an Interlibrary Loan request (author, title, copyright date & publisher). Using databases, the Interlibrary Loan staff should be able to locate a library that has the book and process the Interlibrary Loan request.

To request a book through Interlibrary Loan, the following information is required:

- author (last name, first name or initial),
- book title, and
- borrower's personal information (name, address, phone, and library card number).

In some cases, you may be required to use the book in the library.

To request a magazine/professional journal article through Interlibrary Loan, the following information is required:

- article author (last name, first name or initial),
- article title,
- magazine title,
- date of issue or volume and number, and
- page numbers.

A copy of the article is then mailed to your home address.

Generally speaking:

- An Interlibrary Loan request may take as many as several weeks before the book reaches the local library.
- Libraries may limit the number of pending Interlibrary Loan requests, i.e. no more than five pending requests at a time.
- Usually, there is no charge for this process. However, check with your local librarian regarding the Interlibrary Loan policy in advance.

OTHER LIBRARY RESOURCES

1. Library Catalog. Most card catalogs are now computerized and called the “on-line” catalog. The main catalog menu offers a variety of search options. While there are numerous ways to search the on-line catalog, four easy, basic search options are described below.

Title: The exact title is required to use this option.

Author: Type last name, then first name. (i.e. Smith, Robert)

Words in Title: Type 2-3 words that you think may appear in the title; i.e., “special needs”, “health care needs”, “blind children”, “autism”. This will result in a list of books, which include those words somewhere in the title.

Subject: Select subjects, i.e., children-blind; children-deaf; children-health, children-diseases.

If your library already has one of the titles from this directory available, there may be descriptive information related to the book’s content in the on-line catalog.

2. Magazine Index. These computerized on-line indexes search a variety of resources, usually by subject and/or key word, and in the majority of cases, print the entire article. There may be more than one database to search.

For example, a General Reference Center search will use a general interest database to search magazines, reference books, and newspapers for information. A Health Reference Center search may use specialized databases to find articles on medicine, nutrition, diseases, etc.

3. Internet. The Internet offers access to a wealth of material that is personally, professionally, and culturally enriching to individuals of all ages. However, initially, the very idea of the Internet can be overwhelming and intimidating. If you are not familiar with using this wonderful resource, most libraries offer free introductory classes. Check with your local library regarding this service.

There is a multitude of online search opportunities for the everyday user. To attempt to describe all aspects of the Internet would present a never-ending challenge. The best technique is to take some time and begin searching for information.

The easiest way to search is via a “search engine”, a gateway that scans millions of databases for key words, phrases, subjects, titles, and names. There are numerous search engines that allow you to search for web sites containing information related to specific key words or phrases. Searches have to be focused to result in effective “hits.” For example, the term “children” will turn up millions of hits, most of which will not be relevant, whereas the term “autistic children” will result in more manageable results. More efficient and advanced searching techniques are possible by reading the searching tips which accompany each search engine. Some of the most common search engines include ALTAVISTA, EXCITE, YAHOO, LYCOS, METACRAWLER (searches a combination of search engines at the same time), HOTBOT, NORTHERN LIGHT and INFOSEEK. Don’t get set on one search engine; different search engines are good for different purposes.

An analogy might be to liken the Internet to peeling an onion. Start with the whole onion and then peel away one layer at the time. With the Internet, begin with a search engine and type in the particular term/condition you are researching. For example, with the search engine “AltaVista,” type in autism or “autism.” AltaVista will then produce the hits closest to your request. Using quotation marks with your search term may change the results, in some cases. See “Examples of Internet Search Results” (page 15) for examples of results with an AltaVista search, using various types of autism.

Medline is a free medical web site where actual medical terms may be used to solicit information.

“Useful Internet Addresses” (page 19) contain examples of Internet addresses that relate to children with special health care needs. Keep in mind that Internet addresses may change and/or move frequently, and what is offered in this manual at the time of compilation (Winter 1999) may not exist, or may have moved to another site, at a later time.

Examples of Internet Search Results

The AltaVista search engine was used to research autism and related types of autism. Examples and results are outlined below, beginning with the search word used. The results are quoted as they appeared. For this example, only three or less hits are listed, whereas searches normally list ten or more. Results include a short description, the URL or address, most recent update, size, language used, and whether translation is possible.
